Observations

The accompanying tables are a compilation of Feking and regional broadcast reports on the campaigns against resistance elements in the various areas of China since 1 January 1961. The "remarks" are largely impressionistic.

Limitations of monitoring reception preclude assessing the importance of resistance in a given area as a function of quantitative stress. The paucity of material on South China, in particular, is to a large extent the result of an inability to monitor area transmitters consistently. Large-scale resistance in South China is indicated by reports from Taipei and Hong Kong press and radio organs on the basis of information gleaned from so-called mainland correspondents and Chinese expatriots.

Landlord recalcitrance has not been included among the data tabulated, as too voluminous and of too uncertain relevance. The charges against the landlords, as described almost entirely by the regional transmitters, have not changed to any great extent in the last year and include one or more of the following: (1) attempts to undermine land reform and the rent-reduction movement, (2) the removal, sale. transfer or donetion of property in contravention of legal stipulations, (3) attempts to conceal assets, (4) attempts to increase resistance to the regime, and (5) connivance with Nationalist or American agents or reactionary groups to destroy the regime.

The general development of resistance and Peking's attempt to cope with it propagandistically and otherwise may be traced from the early days following the collapse of Nationalist armies in early 1950. For the remainder of 1950, reports of resistance characterized the opponent forces as KMT remnants who were being mopped up. There were spondic reports of the arrest of secret agents, but by far most comment concerned the elimination of large bands of irregulars. This was especially true concerning the coastal areas. Chekiang, Kiangsu, and those areas contiguous to Indochina and Thailand, Szechwan, Kansu, Yunnan, Kwangsi. There were comparatively few reports of continued fighting in those areas contiguous to Soviet-controlled territories and Mongolia, Sinkiang, Ninghais, Suiyuan and Chahar. This area pattern has continued. There are new reports of resistance from the interior areas such as Anhwei, Hupeh, Hunan, and Shansi, or from Manchurian areas other than the industrial area of Mukden, Dairen and Port Arthur, and occasionally from Changchun, the Japanese Manchukuoan capital, and Tsitsihar.

The early orientation of the Peking Government towards all forms of resistance was one of punishment for the principal criminals, leniency for the underlings, and rewards for the meritorious. A Peking commentary of 26 December 1950 indicated the drastic reversal in policy that was to be crystalized two months later with the promulgation of the "Regulations of the People's Republic of China Concerning the Punishment of Counterrevolutionaries." Lamenting the threat to the established government which had resulted from the "blind application" of lenient treatment, the commentary decried that when recalcitrants were only imprisoned many of them escapes. It was stated, in this connection, that 'many of the cadres lacked an understanding of the basic situation." They forget, the commentary declated, that "ultimate" tory still hangs on the final task of cleaning out the counter-revolutionaries." Our cadres have forgetten too, it was stated, that that their the rifle-carrying enemies have been routed, there are still enemy remnants without guns fighting against us. "Because millions of the enemy have been routed is no reason for complacency regarding a few remnant pockets." The important thing is not how many they are but how much damage they can inflict on the nation," the article concluded.

Parallel with such reports, there were increasing admissions from Peking and the regional transmitters that resistance had grown "more arrogant" as a direct tesult of the "American aggression" in Korsa. Since shortly after the first of the year, moreover, Peking has made almost no mention of the activities of the PLA unite against remain or other counterrevolutionary forces. Instead the people have been urged to strangthen their militie units, to form self defense corps, to enlist in the rediway-protection cadres (which were said to number 1.200,000 men at one time), and to establish rigilante committees in the countryside and in factories in the cities.

As the Forean war developed, the frequency of mentions of resistance activity centered more on charges of counterrevolutionary and secret agent activity under the aegis of the United States and the Nationalist regime. The stress, too, shifted from resistance in the countryside to obstructionism, sabotage and explonage in the cities, and foreign nationals, foreign subsidized organizations, messionary and other religious groups were pillorized as the tools and birelings of the American imperialists. These elements were made the scapegoat of all the ills past and present that beset the Chinese people, and history was drawn upon to document the age-old iniquity of the United States in its relations with China. This tendency has continued to the present time, although the areas in which the Occidentals can be attacked is constantly decreasing.

Sabotage is probably more prevalent than guerrilla activities. The constant exhortations to factory workers to be on their guard, the formation of security crews in industrial organizations and the frequent references to stoppages occasioned by "recalcitrant" and "obstructionist" elements point to a considerable disruption of production. Reports of "stoppages" have generally concerned the heavy industries, especially steel. There is no indication of how much of this resistance is against the participation of the Chinese in the Korean war.
